PASSIONATE.FOCUSED.GO-GETTER

Bianca Dlamini is an Environmental Chemist working for the Swaziland Environment Authority, a government agency mandated with environmental protection. Her work focus areas are water pollution control and the implementation of programmes related to the sound management of chemicals. Through Bianca's ongoing work, technical assistance has been availed to Swaziland to initiate some of the enabling activities for the sound management of chemicals. In her efforts to mainstream gender issues in the area of chemicals management, Bianca, who is also the Gender Focal Point for the Ministry of Tourism and Environmental Affairs, has ensured that every project under the chemicals cluster has an equitable representation of both men and women by encouraging gender equality in the nominations from stakeholders. She also participated in the drafting of the gender policy for the country to ensure that environmental issues were considered. Bianca holds a Masters degree in Environmental Chemistry and Bachelor of Science in Chemistry and Biology from the University of Swaziland.
